

Wafy Cepreito

Bro Zaki

Cam - Broughall
George.

CANADA

NATIONAL LIBRARY
BIBLIOTHÈQUE NATIONALE

—THE—
TEARFUL AND TRAGICAL TALE

—OF—
THE TRICKY TROUBADOUR

—OR THE—
TRUANT TRACKED.

A TOPICAL AND TUNEFUL TRADITION.

TOLD IN TRAVESTY.

A FOUR-ACT BURLESQUE IN GRAND OPERA.

WRITTEN BY

GEO. BROUGHALL.

MUSIC FROM VERDI'S OPERA "IL TROVATORE."

As Played in the Princess Opera House, Winnipeg, Man., September and October, 1886.

WINNIPEG:
PRINTED AT THE OFFICE OF THE MANITOBA FREE PRESS.

Broughall, G

ENTERED ACCORDING TO ACT OF PARLIAMENT OF CANADA, IN THE YEAR 1886, BY LEWIS WILLIAM GEORGE BROUGHALL, IN THE OFFICE OF THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE.

First performed in the Princess Opera House, Winnipeg, Tuesday 28th
September, 1886.

SOUND THE TOCSIN! LET THE CYMBAL CRASH AND THE WELKIN RING!!

The first American Tour of the Tricky Troubadour Operatic Company

BROUGHALL'S FOUR ACT BURLESQUE IN GRAND OPERA,

THE TEARFUL AND TRAGIC TALE

OF THE

TRICKY TROUBADOUR

OR THE TRUANT TRACKED.

A TOPICAL AND TUNEFUL TRADITION TOLD IN TRAVESTY.

MAGNIFICENT SCENERY,

GORGEOUS COSTUMES,

STARTLING EFFECTS.

ELECTRICAL, ENTRANCING, EXTRAVAGANT.

120 — CAST AND CHORUS. — 120

WITH A POWERFUL ARRAY OF TALENT.

CAST OF CHARACTERS.

- MANRICO (Tenor) the warbling Troubadour, in love with Leonora, personated by the superb Mons. Doli-Kart-Billmani, who has frequently sung by request at Osborne (Fort Osborne). For particulars see Court Circular..... SERGE-MAJOR BILLMAN
- LEONORA (Soprano) the ward of Count di Luna, by the incomparable M^{lle} Bernhardt-Arnoldi, a Winnipeg belle with a 'fascinating' falsetto voice, favored by the crowned heads of the western wilds, whose realization of the part has been characterized as a delicate poem of etherealized loveliness..... MR. H. M. ARNOLD
- COUNT DI LUNA (Bass) the "very vicked villain" also in love with Leonora, by Signor Ferte, a type of the Corsican brother. His fame is known wherever the Winnipeg dialect is spoken..... MR. A. E. FERTE
- AZUCENA (Contralto) the Indian Queen, who passes herself off as Manrico's mother, by Mme. Patti-Tullochi. "She has a contralto voice which deserves the encomiums of the entire missionary press, . . . her acting is vastly superior to Scalchi."—Vide London (Eng.) daily papers. . . . MR. H. D. TULLOCH
- FERRANDO (Baritone) Commander-in-Extraordinary of the Count's body guard, the Moorish Othello of the modern melodrama, by Sig. Carlo Salvino Wolf, whose acting is suggestive of a happy medium between Shakespeare at his worst and stump speeches at their best..... MASTER C. WOLF

RUIZ, an Indian Chief, by Gen. Mikichille. "A punster of much notoriety, whose characterization of the piece is most original."—Manitou Dramatic Squeal.....MR. J. A. HEALY
 INEZ, companion to Leonora, a charming little soubrette.....MR. D. D. STEWART
 THE GUARDSMAN.....MR. T. MITCHELL
 HOOPER UP SAM, a Chief.....MR. J. PORTER
 M'LE VESTRI-TAAFFILINI, the Queen of the ballet, the prima ballerina of the Milanese theatres, who has charmed the bald heads of Europe.....MR. W. J. TAAFFE IMPERIAL GUARDS, STAGE BAND, INDIANS, CORPS DE BALLET, CURVETTING CORYTHEES, ETC., ETC.

The only company at present enjoying the honored consideration of Winnipeg's cultured society—a company individually strong, appearing at their united best to unfold a tale replete with local hits and comic songs.

GRAND BALLET DIVERTISEMENT!

A star-trembling, feather-plumed, gorgeously-arrayed

CORPS DE BALLET

(By the boys of the Regiment)

Whose beautiful complexions are like the envy and admiration of the fair sex.

Picturesque Roses! Concerted Minuets! Amazonian Marches! Dazzling Dances!

An army of curvetting coryphees, headed by the ever-fascinating Premiere Danseuse

M'LE VESTRI TAAFFILINI

The whole a grand aggregation of

FROLICKING FAIRIES!

BEAUTIFUL SOLOS!

WAR-WHOOPING INDIANS!

THRILLING TOM-TOM CHORUSES!

Fantastic drills by the imperial guards and their inimitable stage brass band.

BURLESQUE IN EVERY DETAIL!

A superb orchestra under the leadership of Bandmaster Johnson.

The beautiful arias of Verdi's opera, "Il Trovatore," wedded to the burlesque.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

NOTE.—These are only a few of the many kind expressions of the Provincial and Metropolitan press. They are warranted. The manager ought to know. He wrote them himself.

Kamloops Reform Organ.—"When starting out on their first American tour, both M'le Bernhardt-Arnoldi and her manager, Mr. Broughall, resolved never to adopt the paltry methods of advertising which the so-called "divine Sarah," Patti, Mary Anderson and other third-rate actresses have seen fit to bring into vogue. M'le Arnoldi has not been shot at more than a dozen times; she never tangles her name up with princes and English peers; and she does not give currency in the daily papers to the fact that she is consulting her Parisian physician, with a view to reducing her weight. M'le Arnoldi relies only on her reputation which she has made behind the footlights. She has ruled poets, emperors and gullery gods. All Europe has been a slave at her feet; and the nightly concourses in her salon in the Rue de Rouge-et-Noir were something to live for in their coming and to dream of in their going."

Manitou Dramatic Squeal.—"Especially was the singing of Signor Ferte worthy of commendation. Never has it been the good fortune of The Squeal to hear such superb singing. He carries the trio at the close of Act I well, and his 'Il Balen' and 'Oh Fatal Hour' were alone worth the tickets of admission that were left at this office complimentary.

Rowbotham's Real Estate Register.—"There is an impression that Sig. Billmanni is cold in his acting.—Such is not so.—He rivals Cardinal in his wonderful love-making in the third act of "The Tricky Troubadour." In this Arnoldi carries with her no airy-light-nothing-sort-of-a-kiss that is the usual detail of social platitude. Her kiss is not the "cheerless cold clammy compound of carelessness and indifference" which characterizes the kiss of Miss Mary Anderson. But it is the outcome of much care and constant practice and falls pleasantly as a poet's dream. Her audiences wait with bated breath its coming, as she leans a full head taller than Billmanni and swoops swan-like upon him to lay the full tribute of affection that comes chastely eager from ruby lips. There is a sad yearning tenderness, too, about it, something that might have inspired Swinburne to sigh

Oh how blissfully bliss true bliss is,
But meanly mean are unkind kisses."

Lawyer O'Finerty for the Defence.—"Gentlemen of the Jury look at the delicate peach bloom on Madam Patti-Tullochi's cheek as she stands there! Look at her frail, nervous frame, then wonder how she has succeeded in withstanding the terribly active career she has led since she made the Milanese theatres ring with the plaudits of delighted thousands just five years ago!"

Colony Creek Journalist.—"All Europe has been searched to secure the eminent stars now travelling with 'The Tricky Troubadour' Company. The most eminent artists of Italy, France and Ireland have been secured. This aggregation cannot be equalled, from the call boy up to Mons. Dolikart-Billmanni, a tenor noted for his smile and for his capability to capture more high C's than any other tenor in the market. Probably one of the greatest artists with the company is Signor Ferte who fills the important role of 'Count di Luna.' His rendition of 'Il Balen' is one of the genuine treats of the opera. His listeners always wait with delightful expectancy for the low notes of this wonderful bass singer."

J. Michael Caesar O'Flynn in the Bird's Hill Weekly.—"Mlle Arnoldi's rendition of the beautiful part of Leonora last evening in the top flat of the Town Hall was received with rapturous applause. Commencing softly, like the gentle murmur of some wayside brook, inviting, as it were, the hearer to slumber, she sang of her love in the tower. Then gradually increasing the warble in light staccato movement, she spoke a volume with pleading expression; like a wild feverish dream now sinking to a delicate respiration, now thrilling with ponderous sweep of vocal music, deepening like the rush of descending floods, she trilled an agony and a passion, only pausing at sundry periods to let the piano catch up with the show. Then slowly decreasing, in tone and volume, her swan-song died away to the faint, trembling sound of rain-drops dripping through the leaves of sighing trees, till 'nothing' lived between it and silence." Then, as the harmony floated away, and not till then, did her audience know that the agony was over, and that the climax of the evening had been reached."

Extract from a Winnipeg Interview.—"The soprano and contralto prima donnas, Mlle Arnoldi and Mme. Patti-Tullochi, travelling with 'The Tricky Troubadour' company, expressed to the reporter their great admiration for Winnipeg. Seldom in their travels had they come across such a beautiful town. Mme. Tullochi said that Winnipeggers should flatter themselves for their metropolitan tone. 'Rome, it was true, had its Torso, Naples its little Chiaja, London its Hyde Park, Paris its Bois, but Winnipeg has its H. B. flats and its wonderful street.' She had seen nothing to compare to it except the Riorja del Scapula, St. Petersburg. They also admired the wonderful intelligence of their audiences here. At this juncture the carriage was announced, and the two fascinating actresses gathered up their poodle dogs and proceeded for a drive in the shady groves of Dufferin Park, leaving the reporter charmed with the interview."

Stony Mountain Quarterly.—"It has become a fashion with carping critics and professional humorists to sneer at the age of the average ballet-girl. Such jokes are out of place if applied to the beautiful troupe now travelling with The Tricky Troubadour opera company. It cannot be said that out of the glorious history of ninety years on the stage, Mlle. Vestri-Taaffilini still steps jauntily forward to amuse an audience. Time with its heavy hand has not yet added this perennially youthful corps of ballet girls to those historic ruins of Terpsichore, who shone at their best half a century ago. Ninon de L'Enclos may have charmed the world at eighty, and Dejazet may have danced all Paris into delight at ninety, but Taaffilini and her curvetting coryphees and pirouetting nymphs have not yet passed the heyday of their youth. Not at all!"

COSTUMES.

LEONORA.—A white satin ball room dress, very decollete in the back, entrain; bodice a la Pompadour; delicate shoulder straps of point d' alencon, the whole surmounted by considerable swan neck, and superb shoulders de rigueur above a low corsage trimmed with reverses of creamy silk velvet, hauled aft with white tape, applied at a ridiculously low figure. Made up blonde, with noir yeux and the general swing and get up of the Emma Abbott school of Operatic singers.

AZUCENA.—A thing of regal form and splendor, dressed in gorgeous Indian outfit, with numerous decorations, medals and bright regalia; black hair and handsome make-up.

INEZ.—Pale blue satin dress cut decollete, no train, dark hair.

MARRICO.—In Troubadour costume, tights; crimson plush doublet, short mantle, slouched hat and feather, with hand organ and monkey.

COUNT DI LUNA.—Slouched felt hat, top boots, doublet, long cloak, Mephistophelian mustache.

FERRANDO.—Military make-up, a la the Moor of Shakespeare's Othello, with fiercely curled mustache, clanking sabre and spurs, enormous epaulets, medals, decorations, eye glass, white linen leggings.

RUIZ.—An English dude masquerading as an Indian chief.

Guards burlesque military uniform, ballet girls, Indians, comic policemen, stage band as usual.

SYNOPSIS OF THE BURLESQUE.

GRAND ORCHESTRAL OVERTURE.

ACT I.—THE CHALLENGE.

THE TALE, THE TRAITOR AND THE TROUBADOUR.

SCENE.—The Gardens of the Palace.

The guards asleep—How the Count's brother disappeared—Leonora singing of her lover—"It was at the fancy skating carnival."—The Count and the serenading Troubadour.—The quarrel and challenge.—"Police! Police!"—"Me brain it reels—it reels!"

ACT II.—THE PLOT.

VALOR, VILLANY AND VENGEANCE.

SCENE I.—The Indians' Encampment.

The Tom-tom chorus—"Ho, yads! 'Tis Azucena, your Indian Queen."—The Indians' loot and the Troubadour's lute.—"So fight, that when thy summons comes to find."—"Leonora and r-r-revenge!"

SCENE II.—The Gardens of the Palace.

"Il Balen!"—The Plot—"She lov'd him for the dangers he had pass'd."—Faithful Ruiz.—The Actress's Ambition.—Grand Ballet Divertissement.—Defeat of the Guards.

FUN, FIGHTING AND FIREWORKS.

ACT III.—THE CAPTURE.

WAR, WOOLING AND WAILING.

SCENE I.—The Guards' Stronghold.

The Soldiers' Chorus.—A Lecture on Tactics.—Azucena in the Enemy's Camp.—"Unhand Me, Sir!"—"Ha, ha, ha, I have him now—I have him now!"

SCENE II.—The Palace Gardens.

Cupid at work.—The Lover's Balcony.—"Tell Me Again of that Stony Mountain Mansion."—The parting.—"I go—for you and for Mother!"—"Gone, gone! and I am alone—alone!—alone!"

ACT IV.—THE RESCUE.

LOVE, LAUDANUM AND LAMENTATION.

SCENE I.—The Exterior of the Prison.

"Hurk ye, Maid, no Violence!"—On "Rosy Wings of Love."—Slowly Chiseling the Way to Freedom.—Miserere.—"Ah che la Morte."—"Naught remains now but to beg!"—The Sacrifice.

SCENE II.—The Dungeon Cell.

She Sleeps!—"Bless you Mother, for that Sound."—Back to our Prairie Home.—"Do not Curse Me, Manrico, do not Curse Me!"—With My Last Fleeting Breath I Bless You."—The Rescue

And as you should expect in dramatic operny—
Vice falls—and Virtue ambles in to close the play.

THE TRICKY TROUBADOUR.

PROLOGUE.

In Winnipeg lies the scene. In lieu of more Convenient one, we may place the time about
The thirteenth century—an age, 'tis true, somewhat
Primordial in the history of the country.

Throughout the play,
There have been essayed base burlesques and parodies
Of the lines of Shakespeare, and of passages from Byron, "The Lady of Lyons," and "Richildeu," Bryant's "Thanatopsis," too, comes in for its share
Of murder foul. To all—profuse apologies
Are due, for interlarding puns, that were bad.

There has also been attempted
The mimicry of a style, peculiar to Rhea,
Emma Abbott, Kellogg and Bernhardt,—likewise the falls,
The faints, the fierce declamation, and tragic speech,
That exist only on the stage to picture,
In faulty imagery, the action of real life.

To those who seek, for study's sake,
Authority for the events, which are supposed
To have taken place at Winnipeg, may look up Critically Professor Bryce's novel on "Meddling with a Mound, or the Pastness of the Gone;"
Also read "The Letters of Frank Lynn," and "McCharles"
Story on "The Founding of Scheme Town Junction," Embellished with Maps and Plans"—a work whose object
May give rise to some dispute. Future scientists
May claim 'tis a tale of a city dead and gone;
While others may call it an advertising book
To boom town property. If desirous,—critics
May consult "C. N. Bell on Northern Geography;"
While a careful study of Waghorn's Diary,
Will fix the hour, for the moon to rise in Act four.

GRAND ORCHESTRAL OVERTURE.

[CURTAIN.]

ACT I.—THE CHALLENGE.

SCENE.—The Gardens of COUNT DI LUNA'S Palace, steps at the back c., balustrade and railings, fountain scene in rear, wooded wings.

GUARDS discovered grouped on the stage sleeping.

Enter FERRANDO down steps, followed by a burlesque brigade BUGLER with foghorn. Stops suddenly at the sight of the sleeping GUARDS.

Ferr.—

Hello ! why I declare they are all asleep
Like proverbial police, their watches keep.

Get up, you, sir (kicks one), and also you (kicks another),
 When the inspecting officer hoves in view.
 Don't snore, men, on the corners of the street,
 But rise and properly pace your beat.

(They sit up and yawn.)

'Tion! shun, men; when I say "'tion," shun,
 The brigade will come to attention!

[BUGLER blows foghorn, accompanied with orchestral crash. GUARDS spring suddenly upright, burlesque.]

[ORCHESTRA.]

Guards.—(Sing, at the same time wheeling into line, facing the front.)

CHORUS.—GUARDS.

ALL.—"The Mulligan Guard."

We shoulder spears and march and march away,
 From Osborne Fort as far as Portage Ave.,
 With drums and horns how sweetly they do play,
 As we march, march, march in the Troubadour guards.

Ferr.—

Well, boys!—no, I forgot,—men! You are not boys, but as Middleton would say, you are men. Officers, non-commissioned officers and men. I regret to see this exceeding lack of discipline on your part.

Now our brave Count's orders were,
 To keep a watch on Leonora the fair;
 If you are not sharp she will elope
 In the same way as the Count's brother sloped.

Guardsman.—Tell us about the poor boy's disappearance.

Guards (together).—Yes—we—want—to—hear—it.

Ferr.—Now, men, how many times have I told you, that when adopting an air of familiarity with your superior officers on duty, you should do so with the prim dignity which so well becomes a full-fledged private. (Pompously.) You must remember that I have been vested with the Count's royal commission and with the authority of the red book.

Guard.—General! Tell us the yarn.

Ferr.—Ha! now, that is right and proper. Well, the Count's father once had two sons. One was a twin, the Count was the other one. One day the nurse took them out in the baby carriage, to see the baseball match in Dufferin Park.

Guard.—Did the babies bawl?

Ferr. (fiercely).—Sir! I call your attention to R. and O. paragraph 9438, which henceforth forbids a private interrupting an officer in the discharge of his remarks.

Guard.—Sir, I merely wished to know if these babies were the same as other babies.

Ferr.—An apology is always welcome. Well, this match occurred years ago, when they were small. It was the most exciting of the league games between the Mets and C.P.Rs. The score stood 43 errors to 56 unearned bases and the outfield yet to hear from; when in the middle of a dispute with the umpire, an Indian squaw standing close by stole a—

Guard.—Stole a base, sir?

Ferr.— No! she stole a boy
While the nurse flirted with Tom Gilroy.

Guard.—She must have been in league with someone to do so foul a deed.

Ferr.—

Searches were made by the police in every quarter,
Pawnbroker shops, Wolf's auction rooms to loiter
They searched the Sioux, the Mohawk and the Cree,
Went to Sunday school and rewarded each missionnee,
But neither they, the Count, or even Constantine,
Have found a trail of the wandering infantine. (sings)

SONG.—FERRANDO.

AIR—"Abbietta Zingara."

Stood there an Indian squaw, witchlike appearing;
She wore a red blanket and just one ear-ring,
O'er the babe sleeping, with fierce looks bending,
Gaz'd she upon him, black deeds intending.
Horror profound, seiz'd she the babe that dark moment;
Sharp cries of terror soon rent the air around her,
And swiftly as thought flies, there rose a great foment;
The police, the nurse search'd everywhere for the squaw but never again (have found her.

Then by their threatenings, beatings and yelling,
Then by their threatenings, their blows and yelling.
The dark offender was soon expelled,
The guilty nurse was soon expelled,
The guilty nurse was soon expelled,
The guilty nurse was soon expelled.

Guard.—How sad that our dear master should lose his little brother. The whooping cough or measles would have been a better fate.

Ferr.—

Yes, for years the Count sadly passed his days,
'Till the beautiful Leonora met his gaze.
He loved her and sings to her, while from the top flat
They pour water and throw boot jacks at his hat.
He has no chance. She thinks him quite a bore.
She loves another, the handsome troubadour.
But whist, she comes this way, let's cross the lawn,
And as they say in tragedy—"villain begone!"

[All creep off burlesque B. and L.]

[Enter LEONORA B. down steps at back.]

Leo. (sings)—

Ah! me! I wonder where he is now?
If he doesn't come soon there will be a row;
And I won't play my part, the little minx,
Perhaps he's at the Queens playing for the drinks. (sings)

SONG.—LEONORA.

AIR—"Di Tale Amor."

Oh where is my troubadour,
Grinding on the organette,
All day that sweet melody,
The Babes—the babes—the babes upon our block.

THE TRICKY TROUBADOUR,

His sphere would not completed be
 Were he not to sing and play,
 While crowds pass by the other way,
 See saw—see saw—see saw he grinds all day.

Ah! were hackney'd songs denied him,
 Then welcome death's repose;
 Ah, yes, for him in death repose—
 In death would I repose—I'd repose.

[Enter INEZ, R. down steps, a very lively little girl on the skip and the jump.]

Inez.—Now, now, now, it is time you were coming in.

Leo.—The night air is so damp and chill, you can almost hear the interest falling dew on Boyle's promissory paper.

Inez.—Yes, there are too money drafts, but tell me of that love of yours. It is, I am sure, the sweetest romance that ever engaged attention. Who is he?

Leo.—

Who? Manrico?

Ah, how well I remember the day, I think
 We first met down at the skating rink,
 Around we whirled to the music of the band.
 Wer't ever there, Inez?

Inez.—

Oh! yes, at the Grand,
 I went with little Darby Taylor,
 But our skating was quite a failure,
 For he immediately had a tumble,
 And I over him did stumble.
 When next I skate—

Leo.—

Well, what then?

Inez.—

'Twill be when dar be better men.
 But tell me.

Leo.—

Yes, at the rink we met,
 And I fell in love with him, my own sweet pet.
 It was a fancy skating carnival.
 A quaint and glittering throng was gathered there.
 The night air was cold and clear, while the dazzling
 Rays of the electric light shone down 'neath
 The waving branches of the evergreen,
 Which breathed that winter's night upon a scene
 Of sparkling youth and gaiety. There were Dark Moorish damsels there, Don Juans,
 And fancy señoritas serenading;
 Queens of the night, images of the stars,
 And those who depicted Greek and Roman lore;
 Fair ones robed in dominoes, and others
 In the many fantastic guises
 Of a modern masquerading carnival

Inez.—How beautiful it must have been, but why not call it just scrump-tious at once. There would be less words to look up in the dictionary.

Leo. (petulantly).—Yes, perhaps my description was too long.
 But there was one there,
 A handsome troubadour. He wore no air
 Of the dreamy Italian school, that go
 Twanging guitars, 'neath latticed bars,
 To Spanish belles. Nor wore he tights,
 Nor dagger, nor feather'd hat, nor silver lute,
 To speak of the charms of his girlish love.
 But draped in the more modern style,
 With hand-organ and ape attached,
 He sang, in worn-out tunes, of a love
 That was undying; and sighed gently soft,
 As the sound of Aelian harps and ocean shells.
 In this guise, he won the prize
 At the masquerading carnival.
 Then the band tuned up the conquering hero,
 And I presented the prize to Manrico;
 While he whispered in my ear that evermore
 He would wear the garb of a Troubadour.

Inez.—

And that is how we have in this 'operay'
 The wandering minstrel to fill out the play.

Leo—

Alas, since then I have never seen him.

Inez—

I think I heard them say
 He was captured as a vagrant by Chief Murray,
 And was sentenced one month by the Colonel,
 At least so says the Free Press journal.

Leo.—

No, no, no, listen, last night he came
 And ground his organ 'neath my window frame.
 Though stirred with minstrel's power, he sang to me on no lyre—a lyre is not an opposition candidate, but a harp with strings. (Sings.)

SONG—LEONORA.

AIR—"Tacea la notte,"

The night calmly and peacefully in beauty seemed reposing,
 The moon floated in silver light her fairest beams disclosing,
 When thro' the air resounding clear,
 Till then in silence wreathing,
 Gently and sadly on mine ear
 An organ's notes were breathing,
 And words that pensive import bear, and words that pensive import bear—
 A minstrel's song arose.

Inez.—It does not look as if he would be here to-night, so shall we go in and finish our game of progressive euchre?

Leo.—Whist, girl, that is all you care for. I am too flushed with expectation to stay here. I must discard thoughts of him, for I think a deal too much.

Inez.—You are a trump, besides if he comes in and finds you are out, it will be a bluff and he—

Leo.—I'll do it, but perhaps he will neither rue it nor call again.

Inez.—You can cut him straight then, but come to our bower.

Leo.—Well, I ca' see no objection to a gùme.

[Exeunt up steps at back and off R. Lights darkened.]

[Enter DI LUNA, L, very stealthily.]

Count (centre of stage).—

Ah, all is silence, the night is still—she sleeps ;
But no ! that light in yon tower her vigil keeps.
Dare I hope now to win Leonora's regard ?
If I whistle "Come Maud into the yard,"
She might perhaps look out of the window
Or the bull-dog my love might hinder.
To go or not to go ! Well, yes, I'll dare.

(Sweet strains of hand organ heard outside in wing R, playing 'Home, sweet home,' or 'Gentle Spring.')

Count.—

Jehoshaphat ! the Troubadour, I swear.
He always plays that organ on the street
To try and earn enough to make ends meet.
He comes this way. I will hide me here.

[Wraps cloak about him and retires foot of steps, L.]

[*Enter MANRICO, the Troubadour, R, playing hand organ, with a monkey.
Ceases playing.*]

Man. (sings).—

SONG—MANRICO.

AIR.—"Deserta sulla terra."

Lonely on earth existing,
Grinding out old airs persisting.
O come out, Leonore, to kiss the Troubadour ;
O come out, Leonore, to kiss the Troubadour.

If I succeed in wooing,
I'll no more work be doing,
But o'er all men will soar, with the rich Leonore ;
High o'er all men will soar, the lucky Troubadour.

(At the conclusion puts organ down on R side.)

[Enter LEONORE, down steps from R, runs eagerly into arms of the Count.]

Leo.— Darling, how good of you to comè and sing to me.
Yes, I gladly run to your arms and cling to thee.

Count.— Here's a pretty how-de-do ! It makes me holler.
The other chap is looking on, I bet a dollar.

Leo. (passionately).—

Oh, Manrico, I am so wretched when alone ;
Dearest Dove, will you ever leave your own ?

Man. (turning, excitedly).—

Here's a state of things ! What do I behold ?
She's false to me, and oh, I'm badly sold.

(To her).— Is it for this I've trudged the street in comic guise,
Have stolen, begged, borrowed and told so many lies,
To buy ice-cream and earn a living with propriety,
To hire a livery rig and hold my place in society,
To act generally as if I had no senses
By climbing at midnight high rail-fences,
And then when the watch-dog began the chase
Did I not always have a six-mile race ?

Leo. (weeping).—

Ah yes, you did—you did—you did ;
But I was not false when into his arms I slid.
It was a mistake—the night was dark.

Man.—

No more ! Go woo your Government clerk,
And you sir, just wait and I'll see you later.
Dare to raise my gauntlet, I'm a fist manipulator.

(Throws boxing-gloves at his feet and strikes pugilistic attitude.)

Count.—I, sir, am always ready.

Leo. (excitedly)—Oh heavens ! they are going to engage in mortal combat.
(Very agitated, paces the stage.)

Man. (tragically)—

Then man to man, and fist to fist,
We'll fight it out like a pugilist.

TRIO—LEONORA, MANRICO AND DI LUNA.

(Leonora.)

Let thy vengeance
On me then descending,
Who have scorned thee,
Still thee defy !
Strike thy dagger
In this heart offending,
From thy love
That dared to fly,
To love from thee
Would not reply ;
No, no, could not,
Nor would reply.

To thy love
Made no
Reply.

To thy love
Made no
Reply.
No, would not, no,
But dared to
..... fly !

(Manrico.)

Thy dark fate
Is already decided.
Doom'd to perish,
Thy hour is nigh !
Heart and life
To my hand are confided.
Heaven condemns thee,
And thou shalt die !
Thou'rt doomed to die,
Thou'rt doomed to die.
Yes, by my hand,
Thou'rt doomed to die.

Thy heart and life
To me confided,
Thou shalt die.

Thy heart and life
To me are giv'n,
And thou shalt die.
Yes, shalt die, yes,
Thy fate is
In my hand,
And thou shalt die !

(Di Luna.)

Ah, fires of jealous love,
The shame of scorned affection
In my heart are fiercely raging,
In my heart are fiercely raging,
Thy fond words his fate now sealing,
Thy fond words his fate now sealing.
By this hand he's doom'd to die ;
Yes, by this hand he's doom'd to die,
He's doom'd to die.
Ah, yes, thy fond words his fate now
By this hand [sealing,
He's doom'd to die.
Yes, by this hand,
He's doom'd to die,
Is doom'd to die ;
By my hand
He's doom'd to die.
Ah, by my hand,
He's doom'd to die,
Is doom'd to die ;
By my hand
He's doom'd to die.
Yes, thy fond words
Have doom'd him,
He shall die,
Yes, he shall die !

Count.—Our time is limited. The arrangements must be quick. I am supported by Mr. Scoones. Who's your referee ?

Man.—I am generally handled by Mr. R. Burden, C. B. P.

Now I suppose we fight by Marquis of Queensbury rules,
Though rough and tumble was the mode of the old schools.

Leo. (very excited)—Oh ! ring up central, call police, I am sure they are going to fight.

[Enter INEZ from R. followed by a stout POLICEMAN. They stand on the top of steps.]

Inez.—I have one here. Adolphus calls to see me every night.

Count (backing off L.)—

Then at Fargo to-morrow each the other meets.

Man. (backing off R.)—

And both to get one half the gate receipts.

[Exeunt MAN. R., COUNT L.]

Leo. (wildly)—

Oh, what have I done, tell me, this is a dream,
That this—this—is not as it would seem.
Oh, love, come back, I will go mad—mad;
Me brain it reels—it reels.

(Swoons at foot of steps, a la Bernhardt.)

Inez.—

She has 'em bad!

Adolphus, dear, catch me, I am going.

(Faints gracefully back into the arms of the POLICEMAN, who holds her on the top of the steps and fans her with his club.)

[CURTAIN.]

END OF ACT I.

ACT II.—THE PLOT.

ORCHESTRAL OPENING—"ANVIL CHORUS."

[CURTAIN.]

SCENE 1.

SCENE.—A Forrest, MANRICO asleep at the back; a band of Indians and squaws discovered engaged in a wild dance to the music, beating tom-toms. Orchestra continuing.

CHORUS.—INDIANS.

AIR—"Vedi le fosche notturne spoglie."

See how the shadows of night are flying,
Morn breaketh Heaven's glorious arch unveiling,
Like a young widow who, weary of sighing,
Lays by her garments of sorrow and wailing.
Rouse up to labor,
Take each his tom-tom.

(Strike tom-toms in regular measure)

Who makes the Indians a life with trouble laden,
Who makes the Indians a life with trouble laden, who?
Who the Indian's life adorns?
Who makes his life one with trouble laden?
The Indian Agent.

[Enter RUIZ L., HOOPER UP SAM R.]

Ruiz (a Chief).—Our cause is in very bad shape. Hooper Up Sam!

Hooper Up Sam (advancing).—Yes, sir!

Ruiz.—How have the collections been of late for our Indian League fund?

H. U. Sam.—We have fund them very poor. The Chicago people say the Irish Home Rule fund requires all their attention, besides they think we have too much rule now.

Ruiz.—Yes, we have been quite unruly, but our cause has dwindled since our old Chief "Too Late in the Day," shuffled off his mortal coil.

H. U. Sam.—You mean he died.

Ruiz.—Yes, he died. He died very suddenly, before an awc-struck audience of deputy sheriffs and newspaper reporters. 'Twas only for a petty theft, a few paltry thousand cattle, but the Crown Attorney described on a parchment epitaph in monumental terms his offence; but in our hearts we have raised a more tender tribute to his memory. But enough! Let us go somewhere—where farmers let their cattle roam.

H. U. Sam.—

Yes, most everything has gone to ruinin',
What with Bailey, Purvis and the Farmer's Union.

Ruiz.—

If things keep on we will get quite poor,
But say, shall we go and take in Clougher?
And put a red streak through the town.

H. U. Sam.—I say boys, is it not fun playing we are Indians? This is just like the stories we read off in the "New York Boys Weekly."

Ruiz.—Hush! or, to use a vulgar phrase, the police will "catch on."
(Whistle outside.) That signal—at this hour! What does it mean

[Enter AZUCENA, R.]

Azuc (dramatically).—Ho, lads! 'Tis Azucena, your Indian Queen.

(Strikes commanding attitude with upstretched hand and drawn dagger, a la Mary Anderson's Parthenia. INDIANS fall prostrate at her feet in a circle, and rap their heads audibly on the stage three times.)

Azuc.—Say, you people. That is not the way the Indians do. You can get up. We are not rehearsing the Mikado now. We are playing Trovatore. (Sings.)

SONG.—AZUCENA.

AIR.—"Stride la Vampa."

I am an actress, hired expressly to sing
In this performance, at a great big cost,
I can play all parts, sometimes in the circus ring,
Or in grand burlesque, "Mascot" and in "Faust,"
While again I play supe and a chorus man,
But this night I am here starring in Italian—Italian.

(Spoken.)—Just listen to me.

(Sings.)—
Stride la vampa, giunge la vittima
Nero vestita discintae scalza;
Grido feroce di morte levasi,
L'è co il ripete di balza in balza.
Sinistra splende sui volti orribili
La tetra fiamma che s'alza che s'alza al ciel che s'alza al ciel.

Oh, yes; I am a versatile sort of an actress. I can almost, on a moment's notice, play any kind of a part. Last week I starred as Desdemona, for the amateurs at the barracks. The week before I was an end-man in a minstrel performance. Sometimes they relegate me to the scenes, and pile me up with the old properties in the lumber room. In my hours of ease I play a dude. I took whole weeks to study Gus Wade's bow and to practice Hugh John's smile. I forget how often we "smiled" together before I succeeded. Now to-night I am an Indian Queen, and am supposed to have stolen a child, which I pass off as my own. I often steal things. Ha! that reminds me. Ruiz!

Ruiz (coming forward).—Yes, your majesty.

Azuc.—Bring forth the loot! (Ruiz retires.) Ha, I was not always so deprived as this. I often look back with regret on the innocent hours of my infancy, when I hung as a papoose in a moss-bag on the back of a squaw. I never will forget the corduroy ridges of her shoulder blades. Yes, give me back the hours of my youth.

Ruiz (advancing with a large bag).—Here! you are.

Azuc.—Thank you, Ruiz, thank you.

Some day my conscience will make me a coward,
And then—this garment, I stole it from Tom Howard.

(Draws out a linen duster, gives it to an Indian.)

How wicked I am getting now to be,
'Tis the Count's fault, my hated enemy.
Last night I stole a horse, a shawl, and
This address from Jos Mulholland

(Draws out a bill poster labelled "Address to the Conservative Party.")

The night before, I went through Disbrow's effects,
'Twas the only time I never stole a thing, I expects.

And this, what is this—of all the steals,
(Draws out sheet labelled "City Sinking Fund.")
 Both large and small, this is the Big steal.
 Coming away I found running loose,
Rennie's pet phrase—"Loaded for a moose."
 And this is Burrows' essay on the thistle.
 I also captured the school band's tin whistle.
 And this contains James Fisher's bill of fare.

(Draws out valise labelled "Election carpet-bagger.")

Now go, my children, and run around the square.

[Exit INDIANS R. and L. carrying off the loot.]

Azuc.—Well, I must see how Manrico is after the fight. He has been a victim to the emphatic gesture of a pugilist. (Retires to back of stage.)

He appears to have been out upon a spree.
 Been out all night? Get up and let us see.

(MANRICO starting up.)

Ah! I see you have been in a fight.

Man. (coming down).—

Yes, fighting with the Count;
 With hard gloves we did each other pound,
 We never heeded time at the end of each round.
 Never did a McKeown or Steve Cummings slug so well, until at my feet, that all the while ran blood, great Di Luna fell. The doctor carried him away on a shutter.

Azuc.—

I pray you stop, you make one shudder.

Man.—We fought. We wondered as we fought; and we hoped as we wondered that the police did not interfere. But they didn't.

Azuc.—

No matter when you fight
 Contrary to the statute, so fight
 That when thy summons comes to find
 Your place in the police station, where
 Each offender shall take his cell
 In the silent corridors of justice;
 Thou go not paralysed like the simple drunk,
 Clubbed by a "cop," but sure and confident;
 Sustained by leading counsel, approach the court,
 Pay your fine and costs and march again
 To the freedom of a city.

Man.—Yes, and always give the reporter a fictitious name. (sings.)

SONG.—MANRICO.

AIR.—"Mal Reggendo."

Ill sustaining the furious encounter, at my mercy he fell, undefended;
 Fiercely glancing my fist was uplifted, soon to strike him down, to strike him down intended.

When some secret power, some power the blow suspending,
 Firmly held my will, withheld my arm descending.
 Thro' each fibre, cold chills oppress'd me, a cry did me interrupt,
 With cries of warning, the referee with a loud, commanding cry, he thus addressed me: "time is up!"

Azuc.—Then you defeated him ?

Man.—Oh, yes, he was given out on three strikes. He only hit once and the umpire called it a foul.

Azuc.—You mean he made a base hit. My boy, in spite of my teaching you will mix up your definitions horribly. A foul is always a base hit.

Man.—You might think so, but it isn't so now a days.

Azuc.—My child, you remind me very much of your dear pa.

Man.—Tell me, what became of pa I so long to hear of my early history.

Azuc.—

Enough, 'twere a tale that would make Thy cheek to blush crimson like unto
The carnation pink of a tomato salad.

Your pa-pa was arrested for larceny. He pleaded not guilty, but the evidence, the witnesses and the judge's decision did not fail to disagree with him. He is serving a term; and it has cost me a residence in Chicago and a handsome thing in costs to win a divorce.

Man.—And I am ?

Azuc.—You are my son.

Who was it called you pootsy, wootsy, petsy, wetsy,
And took your part in fights with nurse Betsy ?

Man.—

My mother !

Azuc.—

Who dressed you up and combed your little hair ?
Who danced you on her knee and gave you every care ?

Man.—

My maw-maw !

Azuc.—

Who took you to the circus in your Sunday suit,
And taught your little infant brain to shoot ?

Man.—

My ma-ma !

Dear mother, I am sure you are my ma.

Azuc.—Yes, child, I am, and from the regal realms of my heart there stalks forth a maternal love, that so long has lain dormant, now to rise for a fond mother's protection

(embrace.)

[Enter RUIZ L., with a letter.]

Ruiz.—Most potent, grave and reverend seigneur, with mutual pride I salute you. Here is a letter from the post office,—but (noticing loving attitude) it seems I am de trop.

Man. (takes letter)—

Not at all. Pity my low birth. Let me introduce.
In future know her as my mother. Mother—Ruiz.

(reads letter.)

Ruiz.—I am glad to have the honor; any mother of Manrico's will always be a friend of mine.

[Exit L.]

Man.—Oh, horror! Cruel fate.

Azuc.—My child, what is the matter?

Man.—Leonora, hearing that I was killed in the fight, and wishing to escape the Count, has gone and joined a ballet chorus.

And there they dance and sing jangling airs all night,
Till the city council votes them a nuisance and a fright.

Azuc.—

Go and seek her, my child. Go!
Dear Man wreak oh thy vengeance on him;
For the Count is our foe, and I hate him.
Like unto the Red River, whose muddy stream
Flows on as the crow flows, with ceaseless stretch,
To the Lake Winnipeg and the Hudson's Bay beyond,
Even so my hatred strides the stride of anger,
Ne'er pausing to the right nor to the left,
But filled with capable and wide revenge
To do him damage. Go; if you don't go
I'll close my tepee against you, Manrico.

Man. (tragically)—I'll do it. My spirit has been fired with a fierce resolve. I'll follow this Count to the end—of the construction line, that I may wreak a terrible revenge. Those who meet me now will not know me for the change that there will be. There was a time when I was mild and tender, until they drove her; her, that I love the fairest of her gender. Can I e'er forget the dainty curve of her elbow and knuckles?

Azuc.—Or the silvery echo of her musical chuckles and the golden twitter of her melodious chatter?

Man;—And they drove her from me. There is nothing now to live for, but Lenora and revenge. Now each cloud that sweeps across the azure space of heaven, each one of Macaulay's New Zealanders that stand on London bridge, each pattering drop of rain that falls to earth, speaks to me—they all speak to me in doggerel verse—of Leonora and r-r-revenge!

Azuc.—

That's right, my boy, wade in for blood and glory,
And whoop it up, like a first-class Trovatore.

[Exeunt B. and L.]

SCENE 2.

SCENE.—The Gardens of the Palace.

[Enter COUNT DI LUNA followed by FERRANDO, L.]

Count.—Ho! Where art thou, Ferrando?

Ferr. (saluting).—Here, your Highness. I have just formed hollow square on the veranda with two recruits and a small begler.

Count.—That all is queer.

Ferr.—All the rest of the boys are outside on the watch.

Count.—That's right; I expect the girls here soon. But how came she to love this wandering beggar of a troubadour?

Ferr.—

Her father once question'd him,
To tell the story of his life, of the ventures,
The weary wanderings, and tramp-like existence
That he led. Then spoke the Troubadour lightly,
In tuneful rhythm, of his boyish day happenings,
And of the years since then. How he had stolen rides
From town to town, on the bumpers of freight trains,
And ground on a hurdy-gurdy the same old airs
In small towns as in large cities,—at the farmer's house,
The villager's cot, and the rich man's residence.
He sang of persecution and of hunger,
And of the slow gathering together
Of small coins to eke out an existence.
To hear all these things would Leonora
Seriously incline,—and she swore she wish'd
She never heard them; but sigh'd and hop'd that
The man who lov'd her would woo her with such speech.
"She lov'd him for the dangers he had pass'd,
And he lov'd her, that she did pity them."

[Exit.]

Count.—Well we will see if Leonora can escape me, with her haughty spirit and flashing eye Ah! what conquers the gleam of a sparkling eye can make. (Sings.)

SONG—DI LUNA.

AIR.—"Il Balen."

Ah, her smile with radiance gleaming pales the gaslight's brightest reflection,
While her cheek with beauty beaming, costs me far too much, enough to lose one's affection.
Ah, this love, this love in me burning, more than words shall plead on my part,
Her sweet glances on me turning, calm the tempest still in my heart.
Oh, this love within me burning, more than words shall win me favor.
Her bright glances on me turning calm the tempest in my heart.
Ah, this love within me burning, more than words shall win me favor.
Her bright glances on me turning calm the tempest—

Ah still my heart, my heart be still!

AIR.—"Per me Ora Fatale."

Oh, fatal hour impending
Thy moments urge with speed elating,
The joy my heart's awaiting;
Is not of mortal birth, of mortal birth,
Of mortal birth, no, it cannot be.
In vain doth Heav'n contending
With rival claims oppose me,
If once these arms enclose thee
No power in Heav'n or earth,
No power shall tear thee from me.

How beautiful she is! She surpasses those brilliant types of beauty we see displayed in gorgeous cigaret advertisements, that picture wonderful blue-eyed girls reclining on damask couches, to puff lazily aloft from ruby lips, tender clouds of "Vanity Fair."

[Exit L.]

[Enter LEONORA R., with a travelling bag.]

Leo.—They have told me that Manrico has been killed in the duel with the Count. There is nothing for me now but a sorrowful life in a quiet retreat. Perhaps Stony Mountain will do. He used to speak of that place. [Enter INEZ R., followed by RUIZ loaded up with band boxes, etc.] Ha, Inez! and Ruiz!—dear faithful old Ruiz. Have you got all our travelling apparel?

Ruiz.—Ha, by jove, yes, except the Saratogas, and they are coming up the street on wheels. People used to wonder how they moved brick buildings in Chicago. They don't now since they saw a lady's Saratoga travelling.

Leo.—Dear old Ruiz, you have been a faithful servant to the family. I am so sorry our poverty will not permit us to retain you longer in the service.

Ruiz.—Dear Miss, do not send me away! I worked for your grandmother before you were ever born. I do not ask remuneration or reward, but let me serve you.

Leo.—Nay, Ruiz, nay—some day all will be well—but go and look after the trunks. [Exit RUIZ.] Now Inez we will wait here.

Inez.—And are you still determined to leave your home?

Leo.—Yes, I cannot bear the persecution of that wicked Count. Inez, we will go out into the cold bitter world to earn our living!

Inez.—But how?

Leo.—Listen, we will go on the stage—and act!

Inez.—And act!

Leo.—Yes, that has always been my ambition. It is the same old story we have often heard in various forms from Barratt, Booth, and other third-rate actors of a played out generation. Years ago, when a little child, I stood in the gray dawn of an early morning on the principal street of a small village in the back woods of Ontario, and watched the heavy wagons of a circus company roll into town. That afternoon, from the outside, I gazed beneath the canvas tent and drank in the sight of gay prancing hoofs of Arabian steeds—pacing around the circus ring, and listened to the plaudits of thousands. Inspired by a wild ambition, I then raised my eyes aloft to where the flags floated on the tent poles and to where a gay giddy creature in tights balanced herself on a rope, and I vowed some day I would make the stage boards thrill to the beautiful accents of my voice, and the audiences, responsive to my magnetic acting, would rise—

Inez.— And go out! When do you start the new career?

Leo.—To-day. I have had an offer to join a ballet. But we will first see what it is like. They will be here soon to practice, and we will wait on the steps.

Inez.—Lo! they approach.

(Retire to steps.)

[Orchestral music. Enter CORPS DE BALLET, R. and L. March across the stage on tiptoe in single lines Enter R. and L. On steps at back the PRIMA BALLERINA and two CORYPHEES. They perform the fancy drill and ballet dance, LEONORA and INEZ looking on from steps at back. At the conclusion they all advance in single line, LEONORA, INEZ and leading DANSEUSE in centre, CORYPHEES at each end. GUARDS creep up from behind and seize the girls. The COUNT seizes LEONORA.]

Guards (together.)—Ha! Ha!

Ballet (together scream.)—Oh!

*[Enter MANRICO and INDIANS suddenly, with war-whoop.
They push GUARDS to the front.]*

Guards (together kneeling, with clasped hands.)—Mercy! Mercy!!

[TABLEAU.—A Girl gracefully in the arms of each INDIAN, with a GUARD prostrate at their feet. The INDIAN's foot on the GUARD's chest, waving tomahawk. LEONORA, MANRICO and the COUNT in the centre.]

[RED FIRE AND CURTAIN.]

END OF ACT II.

ACT III.—THE CAPTURE.

ORCHESTRAL OPENING—SOLDIERS' CHORUS.
AIR—"LA TROMBA GUERRIERA."

[CURTAIN.]

SCENE 1.

SCENE.—A forest. The GUARDS discovered in double line, headed by burlesque stage band, with FERRANDO.Guards (sing and march, stage band and orchestra playing).—

CHORUS—GUARDS.

AIR—"La Tromba guerriera."

Now let the trumpet, in war tones resounding,
 Call to arms; with courage bold we'll march undaunted,
 Haply to-morrow our proud foes confounding.
 In their tents shall our banners be planted.
 Ne'er more brilliant were prospects victorious
 Than the hopes which our hearts now elate.
 Thence we'll gather renown bright and glorious;
 Pleasure, honor, loot and profit there await.

Ferr.—

Well, men, we must make a better show,
 When next we encounter such a foe;
 Those redskins defeated us yesterday.
 By Jove! we cut a pretty figure in the fray.
 We are to blame. We neglected the red book,
 The training of Bowwell and Major Larry Buch.
 You must take a nine day course at the School of Infantry;
 Join their mess and study tactics from Subaltern Healie;
 Become servants to the officers; and copy all their ways,
 If you want to win the fight in these degenerate days.
 Extend in skirmishing line, with plenty of reserve;
 And charge the enemy with considerable nerve,
 In manner thus—

(Makes a feint towards R, with sword, when—Enter AZUCENA with a gingham umbrella, R Swings umbrella a la bayonet exercise, and receives FERRANDO's feint.)

Azuc.—

Here, here, that's not fair.

Prepare to receive cavalry; form solid square!
 (Opens umbrella, and drops on her knees, burlesque) Now then, haul in the lowly photographer. Everyone who does this movement gets photographed.

Ferr.—Now, my good woman, you have no business here. Who are you any way?

Azuc. (closing umbrella and rising. Aside.)—I see I have fallen into the enemy's camp. (Aloud; whimpering.) Sir, I am a poor lone widow, who is seeking to better her sphere in life. I am looking for an empty block to start a restaurant, where the boarders never, never will suffer.

Guards (together).—What, never!!

Azuc. (fiercely).—Young men, if you throw jokes or spring a pun-a-for me, I have here (pointing umbrella) a pin-a-for you. It is that class of wit which only becomes a third-rate auctioneer. Besides, that joke has a perfume of antiquity about it. The roof is caving in on top of it. It has become moss-grown and mildewed with age. It is a greyheaded chestnut now, with a flowing beard, that can only amble around on crutches. It was in the full vigor of manhood when Adam delved and Eve span.

[Enter COUNT, L.]

Count.—Here! What does this woman within the camp?

Azuc. (aside).—He here! my foe.

Count (takes her by the shoulder).—You will have to move out of the lines.

Azuc. (very dramatically, throwing the Count off.)—

Unhand me, sir!

Dost know that I'm a Queen that levies tribute

From forty tribes of aborigines, and that

It were high treason to lay your base hands

On our royal person. Creep, sir! Humbled and abashed,

Creep from my presence to the hired minions

That serve thee. Here—I draw the magic symbol

Of the Mohawks, facing the east and the west.

Dare but to set one foot within this precinct;

And on thy head—yea, though it wore five million crowns,—

I'll hurl the camp dogs of our tribe.

Ferr.—Sir, sir, I am sure she will set the dogs on.

Azuc.—

Know, proud man, that there is more power on the end

Of woman's tongue than lies in the crowned sceptres

Of a hundred dynasties. Go now, and tell

Thy base hirelings that Azucena has spoken.

Count (rising).—But, my good woman, you rave. You are mad!

Azuc (weakening).—Mad, mad? You call me mad (breaking down.) Oh, no fate so cruel as that Mad! and to be confined in that place which the Grits have pictured as a tumbling edifice—a crumbling receptacle for the nation's unfortunates. A tottering reason to be drowned on J. B. McArthur's swamped prairie. No! I am not mad. I am angry. For you sent my husband to do honest toil behind the walls of yonder tower in Stony Mountain region. But my son, the handsome Manrico, has sworn a vengeance deep. So beware! Beware!!

Count (starting).—Her son? Ha, ha, ha, I have him now. Woman, to thy knees, and crawl for mercy. For your son shall know, through your fate, how terrible is my power. Ferrando,—guards here, quick. (They come forward.) Away with her, to the prison cell. Put her on ice and see that as you chain her, so you keep her.

[Exeunt GUARDS with AZUCENA L.]

Now I think that I shall get my dinner.

Ha, ha, my minstrel, we'll see who is the winner.

[Exit L.]

SCENE 2.

SCENE.—The Gardens of the Palace again.

(LEONORA discovered sitting on the steps, MANRICO at her feet.)

Man.—Ah, darling, I can hardly realize that to-day we are to marry.

Leo.—

Yes, my pet, this day we are to wed.
To love each other. No tears we'll shed.

Man.—Never did I think such happiness could be mine. Now, when you are married to ME, with my position in life, you will be able to enter the set of that band of gossiping ladies, who meet at afternoon teas, to revise their calling lists, to discuss their neighbors and to ignore those who, though not within the charmed circle, try to copy the manners of their set. But have all things been prepared?

Leo.—

Oh, yes; the trousseau came from the H. B. store.
They sent it C. O. D., which was a bore.
The cake and flowers are awfully nice,
I had them all put carefully on ice.
We sent cards to everyone we knew,
And those we did not know—got them too;
So we ought to get lots of pretty things.
I only hope they won't send napkin rings,
Butter coolers, flat irons or fish knives;
But something pretty for newly married wives.
Have you made all your arrangements?

Man.—

Yes, the cab, a quiet going livery hack,
Is ordered to take us to the church and back.
A seven dollar license I have bought for cash
From Walter Nunsey—

Leo. (rising)—

—Won't we cut a dash?

But sweet Manrico, tell me again of that stately mansion, reared on high Stony Mountain's ridge, where you have passed so many years of early life. I love to hear the indescribable charm of that home of yours and others, which you have sworn was so lonely without your Leonora. Speak to me in accents soft, that I may call to my mind's eye the pictures of Arabian palaces.

Man.—No, lady, no. I would that you had not asked me to paint in fiction's language the imagery of that place which you would have me show you. But listen—

(They walk up and down the stage, MANRICO'S arm around LEONORA.)

A small mount,
Lifting its confines above the prairie land,
On whose top a Governmental mansion stands,
With high walls rising for eternal solitude,
Or may hap, solitude for a much less stated period;
Margin'd 'round and about by stony ramparts.
That shut one out from the rude contact
Of the outer world. Where men in grim silence,

THE TRICKY TROUBADOUR,

Dress'd in quaint but effective garb,
 Pass by in serried ranks to a labor,
 That was erstwhile termed menial. Who rise,
 Obedient to the call of duty at one
 Methodic hour, pass quiet lives; and dream
 Only of a busier whirl of life beyond
 Frugal is their fare, simple are their tastes,
 And hearty is the welcome they receive
 From a kind and genial host. This is the place,
 Had Law its way, I might ere yet be still.
 Dost thou like the picture?

Leo.—Oh, love, thy description falls in sweeter cadence on my ear than the closing paragraph of a Free Press editorial.

Man.—Well, the judge gave me seven years with mine.

DUET.

Leonora and Manrico (sing).—

AIR.—“L'onda de Suoni Mistici.”

The mystic tide of harmony

Within our hearts doth flow, doth flow;

Come, love, the church unfolds the raptures

From pure love that grow;

Come, love the church unfolds the raptures from pure love that grow.

Ah, joys that from love shall grow,

Ah, joys that from love shall grow,

From pure love grow, from pure love grow, from pure love grow.

Leo.—But darling will you always be true to me? Have you ever flirted?

Man.—Never, darling, never! I can look squarely up into your lovely eyes and frankly say “I never flirt.”

Leo.—For that, oh, Manrico let thy chest swell with pride.

Man.—Oh, darling, jest not on that subject.

Leo.—That's a chestnut.

(Sits near L wing.)

Man.—My own; call up before your memory a picture of surpassing loveliness. You are sitting in some bay window, behind the folds of a creamy curtain of lace and beneath the spreading leaves and blossoming foliage of an oleander; a beautiful face, bewitching, mischievous eyes, drooping lashes, with a sighing lover at your feet.
 Darling, how many times have you rehearsed that little scene?

Leo.—Ah! yes, how many times!

Man.—And what were those three little words of mystic meaning, he murmurs so eloquently, while the dear girl turns blushing away?
 Can you guess them?

Leo.—Those three little words; oft repeated; always in fashion; ever suitable to the occasion. They are—

Man.—They are that,

“I love you!”

(Kneeling at her feet, clasping her in his arms)

But at last, my love, in the calmness of peace,

I can circle my arms around you, and while

Gazing up into your beautiful eyes,

I can there read that you are only mine.

Look down and smile love. Kiss me, for secure
In each others love, we'll forget the sorrows
Of the past, and that ever a cloud crossed
The sunshine, to mar Love's sweet retreat,
Deep down in the valley of our hearts.

Leo.—

Yes, we will forget that there ever was such
A thing as care. We'll insure the ship of love,
With a fond kiss, and send it floating, secure
Down the stream of life.

Man.—And we will regularly collect the premiums.

Leo.—

Let us kiss, lingeringly soft
And sweet, as the warm breezes from the South,
That gently come and die away, among
The June roses of a summer garden. (They kiss.)

Man.—Darling, where is that mustache that once graced your upper lip?

Leo. (rising).—Oh! I shaved that off for the Mikado, last winter.

Man.—That hirsute appendage used to become you Leonora.

Leo.—Yes, it was once Leonora's pride. It was her sweet hope.

[Enter RUIZ. R. hurriedly.]

Ruiz.—Sir, Sir—my Lord—how can I dare to break?

Man. (turning angrily).—Speak, sir! What have I hired you for? Speak!

Ruiz.—A supe, sir! at two dollars a week.

Man.—Well, if you would gather your shaken faculties about you, which seem to be idly drifting, in a vortex of incoherency, and make yourself intelligible—'T would be welly wise!

Ruiz.—The news has just reached us that Azucena—

Man. (starting).—My mother!

Ruiz.—The same, my Lord, the very similar—the quite identical. She has been captured by the Count and his base hirelings.

Man.—Heavens! what news is this?

Leo.—To cast a blight on whate'er would be the happiest hour of our lives. (Weeps.) Mothers-in-law are always doing something of the kind. (Retires back of stage.)

Ruiz.—The Count learning she was your mother, has ordered her execution to-morrow.

Man.—Go, sir, and tell the tribe that we shall make an effort to save our queen—our queen—my mother!

[Exit RUIZ, L.]

SONG—MANRICO.

AIR—"Di quella Pira,"

Of that dark scaffold her fate impending,
Thrill thro' each fibre, with maddening glow,
Desist, ye monsters vile, or still offending,
To stay your fury your blood shall flow.
I was her offspring ere love I gave thee;
In vain to hold me thy griefs would try.
Mother unhappy, I fly to save thee,
Or else failing, with thee to die;
Or failing that, with thee to die;
Or failing that, with thee will I die!

Man. (turning to LEONORA, leaning on the railing and weeping).—Ha, Leonora, why at this hour do you only lean o'er the railing. Darling, I will have to leave you.

Leo. (in anguish).—No—no!—the danger! You will never come back.

Man. (kissing her).—Farewell! Adieu. my heart's own! I will come back. Whate'er the dangers I meet, I will conquer them all, for you—and for mother! [Exit, R.]

Leo. (violin accompanying).—Gone!—gone!—and I may never see him again! No more will his mustache wave in perfumed cadence in the evening air, to fan the cold beads of perspiration on my fevered bangs. Gone—gone!—and I am alone—alone!—alone!!

(Takes a half turn to the right and drops fainting, a la Fanny Davenport.)

[CURTAIN.]

END OF ACT III.

—ACT IV.—THE RESCUE.

ORCHESTRA PLAYS OPENING PRELUDE.

[CURTAIN.]

SCENE 1.

SCENE.—Night. Wood exterior of the Dungeon. A tower in right angle, with a window securely barred.

[Enter LEONORA and RUIZ, L, in cloaks burlesque look all around cautiously.]

Both (together).—There is no one here!

Ruiz (pointing).—There, in that tower, both Azucena and the Troubadour are confined, by the Count's order. It was rash for Manrico to rush so quick into danger. Now they are to be executed in the morning.

Leonora.—Thanks, Ruiz, thanks, for guiding me here. But go—go. Do not, I pray you, think of my safety. Go, Ruiz, go! Get thee to a nunnery, Ruiz! Here's five cents for the street car.

Ruiz (tragically).—No! (Seizes her hand and advances burlesque.) There! There is the tower! You secure the man, and I'll carry off the tower! But hark ye, Maid—No violence! No violence, I say! For once aboard our trusty street car all will be well. [Exit R.]

Leo.—Now, I will make one last effort to save him—failing which, with him I shall die. I have brought poison here—see it poise on my hand (balancing bottle). In that bottle there is contained such deadly liquor that a single drop will cause death, sure and sudden. With what rapture do I gaze now upon the awful possibility of destruction that lies stored up within the scant space of this tiny vial—and I got it on a medical student's certificate. I shall sing to him now; perhaps it may make death easier for him. When I used to sing to him in those happy days together, he said that it always made him look on death more as a release from the trials of life than as a calamity.

SONG—LEONORA.

AIR—"D'amor sull'ali rosee."

On rosy wings of love depart, bearing my heart's sad wailing,

Visit the prisoner's lonely cell, console his spirit failing;

Let hope's soft whispers wreathing

Around him comfort breathing,

Recall to his fond remembrance sweet visions, sweet visions of our love;

But let no accent reveal to him the sorrows, the sorrows, the griefs my heart

Let no accent reveal to him the trials I now prove, [doth prove.

The sorrows, the sorrows I prove.

(Sinks down in despair.)

(MANRICO appears at the window in the tower, looking down through the bars.)

Man.—Is that you, Leonora? I wondered who it was that was singing there all hours of the night—keeping people from getting asleep. Have you been staying out at the Ladies' Mock Parliament? That is the latest mock excuse now for being out. Where is your latch-key?

Leo.—Alas! I have none.

Man.—Have you no button-hook, nor a hair-pin?

Leo.—Alas, dear Manrico, I had but one and some one hooked that. Now had it e're been my fate, I would not be harpin' on such a subject.

Man.—Oh, girl, you have nothing with which I can cut through these bars? Everything I have is worn out. With the aid of my diamond pin I cut my way through fifteen feet of solid stone, but it is worn out, and now there is only these bars between me and freedom. I would give whole hecatombs of fortunes for even the bent pin with which I played youthful pranks on the master at school.

Leo.—And you dug your way through fifteen feet of stone!

Man.—Do you marble at it? Why they do that every day in the French novels of Dumas—and I can do ma' than they.

Leo.—Alas, I have nothing to give you.

Man.—Then there is nothing now for me but to die! Yet I have sighed for it; for this is more than I can bear. Weep for me, Leonora—it is all you can do, weep.

Orchestra plays the "Miserere Chorus."

SONG—LEONORA.

AIR—"Quel son, quelle prec!"

That solemn petition so sadly ascending
With terror and mystery the air seems to fill.
'Gainst fatal foreboding my heart is contending;
My breath is suspended, my pulses are still.
My breath fails me, my pulses are still.

DUET—MANRICO AND LEONORA.

AIR—"Ah che la morte,

Manrico.—

Now with my life fulfilling
Love's fervent vows to thee!
Do not forget, let me remembered be;
Farewell, my love; farewell, Leonora!

(Manrico.)

Farewell!
Now with my life fulfilling
Love's fervent vows to thee,
Do not forget, let me remember'd be.
Farewell, Leonora, farewell!
Now with my life fulfilling
Love's fervent vows to thee!
Do not forget, let me remember'd be.
Farewell, Leonora, farewell;
Leo—nora, farewell!

(Disappears.)

(Leonora.)

And can I e'er forget thee,
And can I e'er forget thee,
Can I forget thee, can I forget thee,
My senses fail me.
And can I e'er forget thee,
And can I e'er forget thee,
Can I forget thee, can I forget thee,
My senses fail me.
What! I forgetful of thee;
What! I forgetful of thee!
Of thee, of thee; forgetful of thee!

[MANRICO disappears, LEONORA retires L. Door opens in tower.

Enter COUNT.]

Count.—My schemes work well. In the morning both mother and son die. The mother to be hanged, and the son to be shot. That should be the fate of all true bad doers. But another night's confinement in that dungeon cell may drive them mad.

Leo. (turning to the front.)—Naught remains now but to beg! (throwing herself at the COUNT's feet.) Oh, mercy, sir; mercy! I ask from you mercy and compassion for him I love. In all the luxuriance of an exotic style and bad grammar, I ask you mercy.

Count.—Fair Leonora you ask of me what I find impossible to grant. What! Mercy for him—my rival! Why 'twere as useless as the tactics of the Grit opposition.

DUET—LEONORA AND DI LUNA.

Air—"Mira, di acerbe lagrime."

(Leonora.)

Witness the tears of agony
Here, at thy feet now raining;
If these suffice not, torture me,
My life's crimson current draining.
Torture me, torture me,
My life's crimson current draining;
Breathless thy feet may trample me,
But spare thou the Troubadour!

(Count.)

Ah, rather would I speedily add to his fate impending
Thousands of bitter cruelties, torments and death unending;
The more thy fond love to his replies, my anger inflames the more,
The more thou dost show him kindness, my anger inflames the more.

(Leonora.)

Breathless thy feet may trample me,
But spare me the Troubadour!
Destroy me, destroy me,
Overwhelm me with anguish and horror,
But spare him, spare him,
Ah, spare him, spare the Troubadour.
Release him, ah, save him!
Release him, ah, save him!
Ah, crush me a corpse
Beneath thy feet,
But spare thou the Troubadour!

(Count.)

The more thy fond love to his replies,
The more burns my thirst for vengeance,
The more thou dost show him kindness
My fury burns still the more,
My thirst for vengeance is inflamed
And burns the more.
The more thy fond love to his replies
My fury inflames the more.
The more thou dost love,
For vengeance meet,
My fury still burns the more!

Count (affected.)—Well, I don't know but what something can be done. What were his politics?

Leo.—He is a Tory.

Count.—Then there is no hope for him—there never is—and there never can be, as long as I am the Reform candidate for Winnipeg West.

Leo.—But he will vote any way that I say.

Count (aside.)—And we need every vote we can manufacture. (To Leonora)

—Leonora, the Court has sentenced Manrico to death. I was the Court and the Judge. I am, however, of the opinion that the Court may allow an appeal to the Supreme Court; and on two conditions will I arrange it so that the Troubadour lives.

Leo.—Tell me—quick!

Count.—The first condition is that you must promise to give up the Troubadour and be mine.

Leo.—And the other condition?

Count.—And the second condition is that you are to arrange that Manrico and the monkey are to vote for me in the coming election.

Leo.—This is too much! (scornfully.) And if we refuse, sir?

Count.—Then Manrico dies to-morrow.

Leo.—Oh, heavens! (Aside) Ha! I forgot the poison. (Aloud) Yes, I accept the offer.

Count.—Thanks, lady fair. I shall go and see the Supreme Court at once. The Chief Justice is an uncle of mine, and the Free Press says he can be fixed. You can rest assured the Troubadour will live.

Leo.—I am thine, then.

[MUSIC.]

Count (recitative).—Wilt swear it?

Leo. (recit.)—I will swear it, of this my purpose you now beholdeth. (Takes the poison—aside) A cold and lifeless bride thou wilt have me!

Count (recit.)—My foe shall live!

DUET.—LEONORA and DI LUNA.

AIR.—“Vivrà Contende il Giubilo.”

Leo. (sings with transport.)—

Shall live! Oh, Heaven! this boundless joy,
Too great is for words' expression;
But from my throbbing, panting heart
Flow thanks in grateful confession.
Unmoved, my fate I now await;
Rapture this life completing,
With dying breath repeating,
Thou'rt sav'd from death thro' me!

(Leonora.)

Shall live! Oh, Heav'n
This boundless joy,
This rapture is past expression,
To die with this confession.
Saved, love, thou art thro' me,
Ah! preserv'd from death thro' me,
Ah! preserv'd from death thro' me,
Thou'rt sav'd by me,
Thou'rt sav'd by me.

(Count.)

Thou'rt mine, thou'rt mine!
Again declare,
My heart of doubts relieving,
Not yet believing,
Tho' promised still by thee,
Yes, tho' promis'd still by thee,
Yes, tho' promis'd still by thee,
Tho' sworn by me;
Thou'rt sav'd by me.

[Exeunt R.]

SCENE 2.

SCENE.—The interior of the dungeon, barred windows, lamp hanging from ceiling.

(AZUCENA discovered lying on a mattress with MANRICO by her side.)

Manrico.—She sleeps. All the subtlety of her Indian nature lies wrapped up in the arms of Morpheus. Ah! what a blessed thing sleep must be for the Indian, when they can forget that it is their inalienable right to suffer the unpopular sicknesses of the day and exposure. But perhaps she is not asleep. This horrid night in the cell may have been too much. Mother, dearest, wake up. Let me again hear your voice that I may know you live. (She sneezes.) Bless you, mother, for that sound. I know now you still survive the cruelty of that wicked Count. But how have you been?

Azuc.—How have I been? I have been asleep; and my mind has roamed at large in a boundless field of mediocrity, where each thought was as poor as the reasonings of a Globe editorial writer on the last verge of morose impecuniosity. One is happier asleep, I think, when there is no prospect of a brilliant subsequent to give a brighter tinge to the recently previous. (Sneezes.) But child, I am catching cold, or influenza.

Man.—I wish we could influence the Count to let us off. This is worse than the Lancet House. There are ever so many cobwebs here. Oh! that we could escape!—that we could escape!

Azuc.—And return to our prairies green where we could ramble around on shagganappis, and ride in two wheel carts.

Man.—Sing to me, mother, again of that prairie home of ours.

DUET.—AZUCENA and MANRICO.

AIR.—"Ai Nostri Monte."

Azucena (sings).—

Back to our prairies our steps retracing,
There, peace and quiet once more embracing;
Songs thou wilt sing me, with organ grinding.
Sweet dreams shall visit our sleep as of yore.

Man. (sings).—

Repose, oh, mother, silently bending,
O'er thee my spirit heav'nward shall soar.

Azuc.—

Love'd songs thou'lt sing me, thy organ aid lending;
Sweet dreams shall visit our sleep as of yore.

Man.—

My soul with devotion heav'nward shall soar.

Azuc.—

Love'd songs thou'lt sing me thy organ aid lending,

(Azucena.)

Sweet dreams shall visit
Our sleep as of yore;
Sweet dreams of yore,
Sweet dreams of yore,
Sweet dreams of yore,
Sweet dreams of yore,
Sweet dreams of yore,
Sweet dreams of yore.

(Falls asleep.)

(Manrico.)

My soul with devotion,
Heav'nward shall soar.
Repose thee, Oh! mother,
Repose thee, Oh! mother,
My weary soul,
Heav'nward shall soar.

[Enter LEONORA.]

*Man. (starting up).—*Leonora here! How is this?

*Leo. (pointing to door).—*Go, Manrico, your life is safe. Go, dearest, quick; they have need of your services at the poll. I will soothe the last hours of your mother.

Man.—But tell me, how came this pardon?

Leo.—Go! The Count has promised me that you shall live.

*Man. (stretching out his arms).—*Then come dearest, Leonora; come, mother, come. We will return together to our prairie home, where far removed from the scenes of past sorrows, we will pass innocent days together surrounded with the beauties of nature, and the love of each other. Our aim in life to bear no malice, but a kindly forgiveness to all.

Leo.—Nay, dearest, nay, I cannot go. Azucena and I will have to stay.

Man.—You cannot go? Then you have purchased my safety at the cost of your love. You have bartered your affection for what you thought I valued.

Leo.—Do not speak to me in tones of anger veneered. Go—go—or no power on earth shall save you.

Man.—False one! you have been untrue to the vows we pledged each other.

*Leo. (dropping).—*Ah, the poison! I faint! Manrico, here—here. Do not curse me, Manrico—do not curse me—it was for you that I die.

*Man. (beside her).—*Dying!—Oh, this is too much—too much.

Leo. (raising her head.)—Yes, dying. With my last fleeting breath, I bless you, Manrico. (expires.)

Man.—She dies!—she's dead!!

[Enter COUNT followed by some GUARDS.]

Count.—Dead!! Then she has deceived me that she might escape me. But I have him yet. (To the GUARDS) Away with him and let him be shot at once [Exeunt.] Ah! there is the mother. She has to be dealt with yet.

Azucena (starting up.) Where is he—where's Manrico?

(Shot outside.)

Count.—He no longer lives. That shot has ended the career of one who ever stood between me and her that I loved.

Azuc.—Wretch, know that he was not my son, but your long lost brother.

Count.—My brother dead! and by my own hand. Leonora dead!—a victim to my jealousy. Both dead—dead!

[Re-enter MANRICO, followed by FERRANDO and INEZ.]

Man.—No, not dead. Ruiz and his faithful band were just in time to prevent the execution. It was their shots you heard.

Count.—Heaven be thanked for that! Manrico, you are my brother. Azucena has told me all; that she stole you in your infancy. My brother! close, close; let me fold you in these arms (They embrace.)

Leo (lifting her head.)—Oh, cruel poison, why don't I die? I wish I had blown out the gas—it would be quicker.

Inez (advancing.)—

The druggist made a mistake. They sometimes do; And what he gave me has not poisoned you.

Leo.—Are you sure it was not poison?

Inez.—Quite sure, mam.

Leo. (getting up.)—Then I will go on with the play.

Count.—But, Manrico, I have forgotten Leonora. Take her, my boy. You have fairly earned her. And bless you, my children.

Azuc. (advancing.)—Bless you, my children.

Count (kneeling, L.)—Azucena, let bygones be bygones, and accept the homage I lay at the feet of a queen indeed. (Rises.)

Ferr (kneeling before Inez, R.)—And that I lay at the feet of my queen. (Rises.)

Leo.—And thus ends The Tragical Tale of the Tricky Troubadour or the Truant Tracked.

[Grand transformation scene. Enter all. Olivette chorus.]

[CURTAIN.]

THE END.

